(題組 43-45)

An astronaut is a special kind of scientist who goes to space for the purpose of studying a certain part of the universe. The word “astronaut” comes from a Greek word meaning “star sailor.” If you’re interested in becoming an astronaut, you should begin thinking and planning your path.

Before anything else, you need to know that it takes many years of study and hard work before astronauts begin their training. They usually don’t start the training until they are between 27 and 37 years old. In order to become an astronaut, first, you need to attend a university and study engineering*, medicine, or one of the sciences. Many astronauts were also aircraft pilots* in their own countries. Also, you need to be able to communicate with people from many different countries. So, knowing how to speak English and Russian is a must. Next, space training and space flights are tiring, so you must have a healthy body. Lastly, as an astronaut, you will need to work with many people in a tiny space. Therefore, you need to be good at getting along with people. It is cool to work in space, but it also requires a lot of effort. You will need to prepare yourself, so your dream may come true!

* engineering n.[U] 工程學 * pilot n.[C] 飛行員
